

A GUIDE TO MANAGING MORE TIME AT HOME WITH YOUR PET

Tips and tricks for handling an unexpected increase in time with your canine companion.

Recent events have led to a sudden rise in at-home time for all family members – including the four-legged ones!

Moving work, school, and other responsibilities into our homes means navigating new distractions and tackling unique challenges for canines and humans. Luckily, we've learned a thing or two over our 30-plus years working with dogs to help pet owners manage the current situation – and even have some fun doing it!

SET YOURSELF UP FOR SUCCESS – DO THESE THINGS NOW FOR LESS ISSUES LATER

One wonderful, comforting benefit of more indoor time is spending it with your furry best friend, but routines will eventually return to normal. Dogs are creatures of habit, and an abrupt change from lots of attention to much less can lead to separation anxiety and its accompanying, less desirable behaviors. Learning a little now can help pet parents prepare even the most well-behaved pup for the ensuing change in routine – and keep the good vibes going when schedules reset. Be sure to spend time apart from your dog every day while also carving out dedicated play and/or training time.

WORKING FROM HOME WITH YOUR DOG?

A productive work-from-home day can be a challenge if your dog is not used to your ongoing presence – to them, it means more opportunities to train you to give them what they want, when they want it! Carving out a dog-free workspace and setting consistent breaks for pooch playtime are just two solutions that can make a huge difference in a positive work from home experience for us humans while still giving our pups the attention they seek.

NEW ARRIVALS?

Home environments are changing daily, with many families adopting or fostering dogs and welcoming new puppies into their lives. Whether it's the first of the brood or another addition to a growing family, we can help maximize joy and minimize stress. Be sure to adjust your expectations for your new arrival, as dogs of all ages need time to adjust. Manage interactions between pets now to set your family up for a lifetime of harmony, and be sure to maintain consistency. Dogs learn through experiences and association – the more consistent you are, the faster your pup will learn.
